

When Emma started writing in a journal regularly in her third grade classroom, she realized how she could use words to paint a picture. She discovered how her writing could tell a story. She was also interested in how cultures could be so different in such a small area which caused her to want to investigate them. Photography would allow her to capture a moment in time and then be able to write or match a story to that moment. Emma looks forward to doing lots of traveling in the future. One day soon, you might read a magazine byline that contains Emma's name!

