

I Excel in Story Writing

Joseph Shoemaker, Grade 10

The reason I excel at writing stories is because I have an overactive imagination. At multiple times in my life, I have found myself wandering in either a story or a scene that I created in my head to let time pass. I found it weird, acting them out, so, I went to the alternative: story writing. With this hyper active mind of mine, I can take those scenarios, and turn them into short stories or very long tales of fiction, depending I remember them later on in time, or whether or not I think they're worth writing any more in. But, the most important thing about story writing for me is that, I get to let my inner child out, creating scenarios that you would probably find in comic books; people with superhuman abilities, a happy end in most stories, and above all, more recently, a life lesson embedded inside the story that you have to find in order to understand.
